Although our knowledge is compiled and sophisticated through human history, we don't have to know everything because it is already a huge amount of information thanks to wise people. Thus, we would like to discuss Wittgenstein thesis 7 shortly.

7. Whereof one cannot speak thereof one must be silent.

The contraposition of this is 7'. One must not be silent about whereof one can speak. Indeed, there are many curious topics that we don't have answers including the interpretation of God, immortality, the shortest path to realize the ideal world*, and so on. On the other hand, we have empirical (inductive reasoning) beliefs/proof such as physics can describe the world in a grand unified manner throughout mankind's history. Thus, there must be meaning to talk about something we don't know. It is also an implication of improvement, especially thesis 5-7, In general, we should talk about ethics, morals, and good/bad to improve.

7'. One must not be silent about whereof one can speak.

To solve all the problems in philosophy, he finished at 7 thesis. With all due respect, we are still curious that the 7 is the final thesis.

Here, we make Proposition A.

A. If all the problems in philosophy are solved, then Wittgenstein's approach finishes at 7.

Then, the Contraposition A' is

A'. If Wittgenstein finishes at 7, all the problems in philosophy are not solved.

It is an implication that we should keep trying to improve. It is making sense if we think Wittgenstein implied it beforehand. So, probably he knew about it.

*According to Wittgenstein, we should explicitly explain the meaning of the terminology. We apologize we have not completed it because of the lack of passionate members.

* Due to the lack of funding and for world peace, I had to give away the book. Thus, this requires review.
